Destiny 2 new light starter guide

Bungie Destiny 2: New Light makes dozens of hours of free content to play. If you are a new player, you may feel a little lost. Even if you play at launch in 2017 - or the original Destiny five years ago - a lot has changed. We've been here since the beginning and in this New Light beginner's guide, we've compiled 14 tips to help you easily enter the fateful world in 2019. Run through Red War, Curse of Osiris or Warmind Campaign Photo: Bungie/Activision When you start Destiny 2, you'll play an introductory mission set in the old Cosmodrome from the original Destiny. Then you will find yourself in the Tower with thousands of flashing lights on your map. So what do you do now? Consider playing through one of the original Destiny 2 campaigns. If you're still getting a handle on how Destiny 2 works, you might want to slow down before jumping headfirst into the latest season or updating planets. Operation Red War was launched with Destiny 2, and it tells a decent story. It's also quite long, so you should learn a lot about Destiny 2 at the end. If you're looking for something a little shorter, you can also play Curse of Osiris or Warmind campaigns. In our opinion, Warmind is a little shorter and more interesting than the curse of Osiris. You won't get much on weapons or armor to complete these campaigns (only a few drops of Exotic are guaranteed in each campaign. (Exotics are powerful weapons and armor with unique privileges). But they will give you a sense of what to expect from Destiny 2. Aim to deal bonus damage If you've played a first-person shooter before, you probably know that getting a topshot deals more damage than shooting anywhere else. Well that's just mostly true in Destiny 2. For most types of enemies, aiming at the head, but enemies like Vex (white and yellow shifting robots) are a little more complicated. Headshots don't always headshots The Vex won't take additional damage when you hit them in the head. Instead, you need to shoot them in glowing positions around their bellies (lovingly called juice boxes). Other enemies such as Servitors or Shanks (floating orbs and drones accompanying fallen enemies) have accurate hits from their large central eyes or shields respectively. Skorn also has some unique hit points, like their effervescent glowing backs or flaming flails. When you get an exact hit (Destiny 2's word for headshot), the yellow number pops up around the enemy. If you don't get the yellow number, hit the enemy elsewhere. Use energy weapons on shields If enemies have shields (usually expressed with a small white bar above their health), they will receive no exact damage at all. You can remove a shield with any type of damage, but energy weapons (guns in the second or heaviest slots of Inflict bonus damage to the shield. If you can combine the elements to shield on the enemy (Void/Purple damage to a Void/Purple shield), then the shield will explode and inflict bonus damage to enemies and their nearby allies. Always take it Bungie Special Weapons, High Moon Studios/Activision In Destiny 2, has three ammunition floors: main/white ammunition weapons (a single white bullet near their logo), special/green ammunition weapons (two green bullets near their logo) and heavy/purple ammunition weapons (three purple bullets near their logo). Special weapons and main weapons each person can go in the first two slots, depending on if they are energy or dynamics (meaning no energy factor). That allows you to use two main weapons or two special weapons if you wish. You can make some interesting builds on both, but each has its problems. If you go with the main pair, you will always have bullets but will not be able to cope as much damage. Special weapons provide high bonus damage with bullet costs. So if you have two special weapons, you will always be low on ammo but big damage. Grab one of each of the most scripted - a single primary and a unique special. That way, you always have a special weapon to take care of the big bosses and enemies and a main weapon when you run out of ammo. Think twice before deleting your items In Destiny 2, you don't need to use your most powerful weapon for better gear to drop. As long as you haven't deleted it, the game will always drop loot based on your highest possible Power Level - including items in your vault. Your power level is how the game measures your power. Your power level grows, depending on how powerful your device is. If you want to take on harder content in Destiny 2, you'll need a higher Power Level. Don't delete something that might take you hours to get back to When you first start, don't delete items you receive unless they're in white, green, or blue quality. Even then, make sure they're no better than what you're using. Sometimes it can be a real pain to get some weapons in Destiny 2, and you don't want to erase something eventually you might have to spend hours getting back. Before you have an idea of what you want to keep and what's safe to delete, throw the contents into your vault instead of removing it. You have access to the cellar from the Tower, near Banshee-44 - Gunsmith. The vault comes with 500 inventory slots, and all you need to do is open the vault, open your inventory and start storing or withdrawing items. If you find something you really like and are afraid of deleting, you can lock a weapon by pressing shift on the computer or pressing an analog bar with a controller. At that point, you cannot delete a locked weapon until you unlock it. Experiment with different types of guns and peris privileges Photograph: Bungie When you first start in Destiny 2, enemies and missions will throw weapons at you at all times. That's all right! Take a moment to try out the new weapons you get, even if it's not as good as a gun at your own. There are many different types of guns in Destiny 2, and while you never need to commit to just one, it's always helpful to know what you like. When you're more comfortable, start testing your favorite weapons What privileges do they have? (Perks is the ability to attach to your gun that affects its effectiveness) Guns in Destiny 2 often come down to feel (all feel unique) and privileged. Finally, you'll learn exactly the kind of per privileges you like, for example, applause - we're part of combinations like Rampage and Outlaw - but you have the test to get there. Waiting to transfer your device If you have a piece of cake that is low level, you can sacrifice a weapon to bring your favorite gun up closer to your current energy level. This process is called infusion. Don't want waste transfer material on items you'll probably replace soon Infusion is a great to keep your loot usable in harder content, but it's also quite expensive. Before you start solving really difficult things like attacks or dungeons, transmit your favorite equipment so that your damage is not lacking. But while you're still learning how to play, don't worry too much about leveling your favorite device after it falls behind. You'll have plenty of time to play with your favorite things, but you don't want to waste infusion material on items you'll probably replace in a few hours. Let higher level players show you how One of the most interesting parts about Destiny 2 is the shared world experience. If you jump on a planet to play some public events (small missions take place in one area), you will definitely bump into other players. Public events have tougher and more rewarding versions called Hero Public Events. To activate these, you need to complete a secret goal. If you're new, see players with higher Power Levels or armor that look cooler than you to see what they're doing. (Also read our guide.) The Destiny community is usually friendly and useful for new players, but it's not uncommon to meet grumpy guardians if they feel like you're messing up their Public Event. If someone is running around you, shooting you, or punching you, they may be trying to get your attention. See what they're trying to teach you! For PC players, Bungie has local chat by default. This makes communication quite difficult, so go into the game settings and turn it on. You will learn all sorts of new tools from nearby players. Run weekly challenges to get powerful equipment Picture: Bungie via Polygon There are plenty of opportunities to get powerful pieces of cake in Destiny 2. Each week, there is a set of challenges to complete worldwide. They are expressed by a blue star on a supplier or planet, and they re-establish every Tuesday morning. Some of these are quite complex (like Nightfall) or change season after season (like Vex Offensive). But many of them are only related to the activities played in Destiny 2. Check out Flashpoint weekly on one of the planets (just complete public events or lost sectors) or play a few Crucible matches to get a big piece of loot. Look at your collection to find cool weapons and armor If you see a guardian running around with a cool looking gun or some amazing armor, you you check them to see what it is. But you can also look at your own Collection to find great things that you don't yet own. Hope the collection is easy, and it's right next to your character sheet. Once in the menu, you can look at all the different cannons, automatic rifles, and pieces of armor in the game. There is a place for Exotics to tell you where most of them come from. You can't see some pieces until after you discover them, but if you're just looking for some new devices, collection is a great place to start. Grab new bonuses every day If you're looking for power, you'll need XP to upgrade your seasonal Artifact (an upgrade system that offers unique weapons power and abilities). With each new level, you will achieve a permanent power level boost for your character. One way to get XP bonuses every day is to get bonuses all over the world. Different providers offer different bonuses for a small amount of Glimmer (the game's most basic currency). Most of these missions only require you to kill a certain number of enemies or run the Lost Sector. The bonus is great to have while you play, so get bonuses for whatever activity you're doing before you venture out for the day. Being killed by architects means it's not your fault You'll kill a lot of things in your time with Destiny 2, but you'll die a lot as well. Most of those deaths will probably be your fault. But if you see being killed by the architect in your screen after you die, it means you didn't actually do anything wrong. If you pay attention, you can learn from your mistakes. The architect is Bungie's interesting term for something that went wrong. Usually this pops up if you get accidentally flung into a wall of enemy movement or self-combustion – believe it or not, both have happened before. It can also mean you fall off a cliff or don't slow yourself down and die from fall damage. It's great that the game shows you how you die, because if you pay attention, you can learn from your mistakes. But if you continue to see killed by architects, just know that there isn't necessarily anything you could have done to prevent that death. You can filter those out and focus on the other reasons you died. Take new Exotics from Xur every week Since the original destiny, Friday is xur day. Xur is a merchant born in a random location around destiny 2 world every week. He sells exotic weapons and armor - powerful, unique, and desirable tools. All of Xur's items can drop randomly if you play enough, but Xur is a guaranteed way to get some new items to fill your arsenal. Find him every week, and spend some legendary Shards - a currency The popularity you get for almost everything, especially clearing the legendary purple weapons you get as rewards from most operations or suppliers – for buying new items. We post a Xur tutorial like this every week. Using groups looking for apps like Discord Now that you know the basics of Destiny, you're ready to tackle some of the more difficult content. But if you a few friends, you won't be able to raid or complete the hardest activities. That's where Discord and the Bungie app are useful. The Bungie app lets you create custom fire crews - groups of two six players - that others can join. It's really easy to use, especially for console players. Just link your account on your phone and get going. If you're looking for some very specific, hard-to-play tools, there are some Discord servers devoted to finding Destiny 2 groups. We are fans of the group Destiny subreddit Discord and Destiny 2 PC LFG Discord. No matter where you play or the platform you're on, you just can't just about always find some guardians to play with in groups. Use an inventory management app like DIM Destiny Item Manager Once you have a lot of guns in Destiny 2 - especially if you intend to play multiple characters - you'll need some help managing your inventory and inventory. You don't have to go back to the Tower every time you want to send something or put it in your inventory. Instead, there are a few apps to use. Bungie has a decent management app for phones. But there are also some great third-party apps. If you're using a laptop or desktop to manage items, we recommend using The Fateful Item Manager (DIM). If you want a DIM alternative or want to use your phone, check out the Ishtar Commander App. And that's it! If you've made it all the way to the finish, congratulations: You have a great platform to get the most out of your first few days with Destiny 2. There is still a lot to learn, but that knowledge will come to time. Now is the time to explore space and destroy evil, Guardian. Good luck, and see you starside. by the star.
